Let not the world consume you within the pity of its existence. For it is said that one whom dwells upon the sadness of those inhabiting the realm are certain to be riddled with the sorrows of those whom profess to belong. Think more of the joy of life and the beauty of the secrets that are yet to unfold, as I say unto you let man and beast be one, let the nature of this world be at war and peace within the breath of time. Let not those whom mock win through their ignorance, but say unto them that you will not judge for least you be judged. Zakul (1:16)

Hear now the words of Destiny and the placement of the sands of time with those whom trust, with Zakul and Ehcuju (Eey-coo) shall the blind be put to peace:
